To whom it may concern,

Micheal was under my supervision as a Video Content Specialist at Woodward West. As a seasonal employee, Michael exceeded my expectations in every way. I had the chance to lead a team of seven in Woodward, Pennsylvania, and a group of three at Woodward West. Michael was the hardest working employee of that bunch. Every Monday, we would have shot-list meetings to discuss what deliverables were necessary for the upcoming week. Michael would accomplish those goals without hesitation or question and exceed expectations every time. The job required a level of self-motivation and intuition that can be difficult for many young employees, but Michael showed great ability to perform without strong management.

Not only did Michael create tremendous video assets, but he also created these assets through the lens and image of the Woodward brand. In addition to his marketing and content creation skills, Micheal was also fun to be around. Even when our team was overwhelmed with our workload, Michael managed to be kind and generous while uplifting those around him. One week, in particular, the team had to work a 65-hour week, and he made time to buy the team steaks and cook for everyone. Michaels' hard work and determination are hard to find, and we were so grateful to have him a part of our team this summer.

Best Regards,
Ben Corrado
